To our graduates:

Thinking that this publication will be gazed through many times in the future by you and your friends, I conceive this is a message already from the past as I write. This time capsule will remind you of a warm and remote time when your ideas were confirmed through experimentation, hard conversation and work, and not a little direction by your professors here at RISD.

From this perspective, if I could remind you of one thing it would be to be truthful to your own vision of the world. It is only through this vision that you are of value to society and to yourself. Exploring the implication of that vision means committing to the expression of it in places where it will count for something and for somebody else. Putting those ideas to work for other people will make your time here on this earth count for something too.

All of us at RISD whom you will remember, and some you will also forget, have dedicated ourselves to generating in you confidence in that vision and the tools with which to express it. There could be no greater satisfaction for us than for you to help someone else with the talents and tools you now possess. In whatever form you choose, you will have become part of everything that counts for us.

RISD will still be a vibrant place at whatever moment you read this message; it is there to welcome your involvement as a distinguished member of our alumni, whatever your current field of endeavor. You're part of our extended family. We would welcome a call to hear of a good idea, or your visit to the campus to see what we're up to now. Further, we'd be proud if you'd mention you graduated from RISD with each success!

Good luck

When I look at an object, I look to see if it has a past, a subtext that extends beyond the object. I have enormous respect for things that are timeless. Some things cross time with grace; they have this mysterious, eternal beauty. And usually they are very simple. I also respect things that are classic -very sophisticated and far from the danger of being dated.

Memorial — David Rosenberg

Dave brought Clive, his companion Basset, into my office every Monday night at six for my class With A Pen Of Light. They made a pair. David smiled calmly with that clownish gap while Clive poked his snout among my spaces like a sleuth sniffing clues to my character. Dave might make a remark about my film choice for the week as he would grab my keys and the khaki package of magic to take it off to the booth and do its stuff. The most reliable and reassuring of projectionists, David Rosenberg knocked down doubt and built up spirit.

Later during the week that followed in the path of the Monday class, Dave and Clive would move along Wickenden. Dave would tap at the window of a cafe to get me to return his grin. If the server would let him, he'd bring Clive in for a pat and a chat. Dave talked me into adopting my own pup, my Italian greyhound Greta, an artistic breed, the favorite of princes and portraitists of the Renaissance. Our familiars suited us, Dave down to earth, me with my head in the clouds.

Movies and our mutts brought us together over our coffee, but not always just the flicks. David wrote a far-out far-east travel journal in our freshman composition course. When he started out in landscape architecture, we touched base on gardening and lost Eden, both earthly and religious.

Sometimes to room 412 CB David — the name means "beloved" — brought not just Clive but Joe, a mate who looked a bit like him, the same general shape. They sat in the back mini-row on black vinyl seats, like David and Jonathan.

My favorite flavor of old film footage is that smoky spiritual quality. Gene Tierney, Merle Oberon and Veronica Lake aged and passed away in real life. But in reel life they jump back and prove how actual myth figures in our lives. Cocteau, who wrote the phrase for his craft, "with a pen of light," noted the strange tie between dream and fact, two kinds of truth. He saw death as a passageway between body and soul, our everyday Orphic mystery.

David Rosenberg makes me think of an eternal figure from folklore. That smirk on the edge of irony but too good-natured for sarcasm. Everybody liked Dave, but he still struck you, perched on an onyx block by the auditorium side doors, like a loner, a profile of reverie. He kept promising to show me the script for his thesis, but I will have to invent it from the ribbons of negatives in his paper trail. The grip he left behind, people scrambled to put their fingers round its handle to reach its contents, all mystery now. As the years roll over this class, David will stay on as the rest go and change. In his worn coat, a symbol of the understated 90's, a spirit both melancholy and merry, both solid and spiritual like our collective evolution, a maker of both gardens in soil and dreams on celluloid, like our school, he looms among and above us like our group guardian angel.

As I see my movies, I will summon David's soul like a projectionist from Paradise. At a Quaker-like memorial service held in the BEB building during wintersession, I lit the Jewish kaddish candle. It stands as a sort of lighthouse. It guides David's spirit back to us briefly as it spins its own way round the universe like a comet. Meanwhile Clive roamed among the semicircle of students. Some spoke, clearly or through sobs, saying loving things about their fellow art student. His dad told them to take up their tasks in their studios. He added, he had gotten to know his son best during the making of his senior project. His mom lit the little lighthouse-candle and read a poem. His sister Stephanie said she'd learned new things about her brother. Peter O'Neil, his mentor and teacher sitting beside this handsome family, said,"I'm the only Quaker here. We close by shaking hands and going." I mumbled to Stephanie,"This was also a shiva."

I want to spin metaphor out of this memorial. How else can we defeat death except through the grace of art? We lost a pen of light in the long hard winter of '93-'94. But it has writ a flourish across this class and left its mark on our horizon.

This book was designed using a visual system. It may appear an d o

but there is an underlying pattern. This system is not meant to be seen, but is to speak to viewers unconsciously. This concept has been found in many ancient art forms.
